  - He completed the Ironman Canada in August, 2012.
  - When asked to reflect on the year, he said:

    “The feeling was far less than what my honored teammates were feeling. They were doing it for the kids. When Matt started training, he was feeling way better than he was feeling before. He was feeling better with the cause for the race season. When Matt started training for the Ironman Canada, he decided to turn his life around and take his health seriously. He tried a few things but nothing seemed to work. When Matt finished the Ironman Canada, he saw the difference in his life. He was feeling way better than he was feeling before. He was feeling better with the cause for the race season.”
